

Escaped bull safe at home

by Kristen Haire

The local bull named Fred, whom gained celebrity status by touring the countryside after breaking out May 10, was finally returned home May 30.

Local cattle farmer Jane Mason noticed Fred in her herd, and with growing suspicion decided to count the cattle in her feedlot. After confirming that there was indeed an extra head of cattle, Mason contacted the OPP, who then directed her to the bulls owner. It is unknown how the bull got into the feedlot, but his reputation from climbing through impossibly small gaps in fences is definitely generating some theories.

Owner Laura Cameron would like to thank Jane Mason and family for taking such good care of Fred, Karen at the Nottawasaga OPP for directing Jane to Fred's owner, her Uncle Joe, Ruth, Kristen and William Haire, Shirley Shea for her help trying to catch Fred and for her understanding for the fence he damaged, and all of the caring people who called to see if Fred made it home.
